The Allied Occupation of Paris. The manners of "Half Century Ago" is the subject of a readable article in Chambers' Journal, from which we quote a picture of Paris during its occupation by the allied armies after the fall of Napoleon: Of the conduct of the allies and their in-French, Richards, & Co. voluntary hosts in Paris, we have many curious particulars. The English soldiers behaved remarkably well, and were not maltreated. During all the time our troops remained there, only one was found dead in the streets; whereas, it was not unusual to find in the morning, in deep wells or cellars, several Prussian soldiers, so strong was the hatred borne against them by the French. One afternoon, upwards of a hundred Prussian officers entered the galleries of the Palais Royal. They visited all the shops in turn, insulting the women and striking the men, breaking the windows, and turning everything upside down; nothing, indeed, could have been more outrageous than their conduct. When information was brought to Lord James Hay of what was going on, he went out, and arrived just as a troop of French gens d'armes were on the point of charging the Prussians, then in the garden. He lost no time in calling out his men, and placing himself between the gens d'armes and the officers, said he should fire upon the first who moved. The Prussians then came to him and said: "We had all vowed to return upon the heads of the French in Paris the insults that they had heaped upon our countrymen in Berlin; we have kept our vow, and will now retire." Nothing could equal the bitter hatred which existed, and still exists, between the French and the Prussians. The French officers took every opportunity of insulting the English. "Our countrymen, in general, were very pacific, but the most awkward customer the French ever came across was my fellowcountrymen, the late Sir Charles S .... of the Engineers, who was ready for them with anything-sword, pistols, sabre or fists-he was good at all; and though never seeking a quarrel, he would not put up with the slightest insult. He killed three Frenchmen in Paris, in quarrels forced upon him. I remember, in October, 1815, being asked by a friend to dine at Beauvillier's, in the Rue Richelieu. where Sir Charles S-, who was well known to us, occupied a table at the further end of the room. About the middle of the dinner. we heard a most extraordinary noise, and on looking up, perceived that it arose from S-'s table; he was engaged in beating the head of a smartly-dressed gentleman with one of the long French loaves so well known to chastised in so summary a manner: he had stared and laughed at S-in a rude way for having ordered three bottles of wine to be placed upon his table. The upshot of all this was a duel, which took place next day at a place near Vincennes, and in which Sshot the unfortunate jester. When Sir Charles S- returned to Valenciennes, where he commanded the engineers, he found on his arrival a French officer waiting to avenge the death of his relation, who had only been shot ten days before at Vincennes. They accordingly fought before S- had time even to shave himself or eat his breakfast, he having only just arrived in his coupe from Paris. The meeting took place in the fosse of the fortress, and the first shot from S-'s pistol killed the French officer, who had actually traveled in the diligence from Paris for the purpose, as he boasted to his fellow travelers, of killing an Englishman." A friend of Captain Gronow's was walking with a beautiful companion in Paris, and was followered by a half-pay officer of Napoleon's army, "Colonel D-, a notorious duelist, who observed to the people about him that he was going to bully 'un Anglais.' This man was exceedingly rude in his remarks, uttered in a loud voice; and after every sort of insult expressed in words, he had the impudence to put his arm round the lady's waist. My friend indignantly asked the colonel what he meant, upon which the ruffian spat in my friend's face; but he did not get off with impunity, for my friend, who had a crab-stick in his hand, caught him a blow on the side of the head which dropped him. The Frenchman jumped up, and rushed at the Englishman, but they were separated by the bystanders. Cards were exchanged, and a meeting was arranged to take place the next morning in the neighborhood of Passy. When my friend, accompanied by his second, Captain Hof the 18th, came upon the ground, he found the colonel boasting of the number of officers of all nations whom he had killed, and saving: 'I'll now complete my list by killing an Englishman-Mon petit tir aura bientot ton conte car je tire fort bien.' My friend quietly said: BILLS OF LADING, 'Je ne tire pas mal non plus,' and took his place. The colonel, who seems to have been a horrible ruffian, after a good deal more swaggering and bravado, placed himself opposite, and on the signal being given, the colonel's ball went trough my friend's whiskers, whilst his ball pierced his adversary's heart, who fell dead without a groan. The duel Show Cards and Bills made much noise in Paris, and the survivor left immediately for Chantilly, where he passed some time. On his return to Paris, CHECKS, the second of the man who had been killed, Commander P-, insulted and challenged my friend. A meeting was accordingly agreed upon, and pistols were again the weapons used. Again my friend won the toss, and told his second, Captain H-, that he would not kill his antagonist, though he richly deserved death for wishing to take the life of a person who had never offended him, but that he would give him a lesson which he should remember. My friend accordingly shot his antagonist in the knee; and I remember to have seen him limping about the streets of Paris twenty years after this event." But show Bills, Hotel Bills of Fare, Hand the most curious of all the duels fought during the allied occupation was one which took place at Beauvais. "A Captain B-, of one of our cavalry regiments quartered in that town, was insulted by a French officer.

Of my tender old rhyme.

and a crowd assembled to witness it." RAILROADS.
